LITTER SWINE LIGHTLY.

There is but little danger of horses, cattle, and sheep being given too much litter; but where swine have shelter that wards off winds and rain, and where the hogs are allowed to herd together, they require very little litter. Giving them too much is a common error, and is the source of nearly all the bronchial and pulmonary diseases which affect hogs in the late winter and early spring. The body of the hog is of such a nature, and these animals lie so close together, that if they have for litter a poor conductor of heat, they become over heated in the shelter and chilled when they come outside. But the liquid excrement of swine is too valuable to be lost, and they should be supplied with dry earth. This affords a convenient means of saving both solid and liquid excrement, and does not lead to disease. When hogs rapidly fatten their bed, the litter should be removed each morning and a new quantity supplied.

To be profitable, the litter must be properly composted. Build a four-square pen of poles in any convenient situation, and place a roof over it that will effectually ward off the rain. Into this pen throw the litter and manure, being careful to keep the mass level or lowest in the middle. There is no drainage from the pen, as there is a roof over it. Use enough litter to hold all the urine; it rots well, rarely requiring turning-over before using. It is, however, easy to build another pen at one side, and throw the compost from one to the other. Frequently fork over the surface, going as deep as possible, scatter shelled corn over it and turn in the hogs, being careful to turn them out as soon as they have done rooting. If the hogs do not go deep enough, make holes with a sharpened stick, and fill them with shelled corn. An enterprising hog will go to the bottom.—J. M. STAHL, in American Agriculturist for December.

RENTING LAND OR SHARES.

As a rule, farmers do not like to rent land in high condition on shares, and the man who works land on shares almost always pays too high a rent for it. We have rarely seen a farm that had been rented on shares for several years that was not badly "run down." It would seem, therefore, that there is something radical ly wrong in the system.

The only farming that pays is good farming. We mean by good farming, draining when necessary, thorough cultivation, the destruction of weeds, sowing and applying manure or plowing under green crops, and doing the work in good season and in a workmanlike manner. The man who hires land on shares pays for it labor. The more labor he puts into the land the higher rent he pays—the less labor the less rent. This is true, at least, so far as the tenant is concerned. He may put considerable labor into the land without the owner getting any benefit from it, owing to poor land or poor judgment, or the failure of the crops from floods, drought, insects, etc. But if the tenant puts on the labor he pays the money which the labor represents, whether the owner gets it or not. In other words, the tenant assumes the risk of poor seasons, just as much as if he paid money rent. He quickly finds this out, and sooner or later learns that the less labor he puts on the less risk he runs.

—JOSEPH HARRIS, in American Agriculturist for December.

SOAP BUBBLES.

Few things amuse children more than blowing bubbles. Dissolve a quart of an ounce of castile or oil soap, cut up in small pieces, in three quarters of a pint of water, and boil it for two or three minutes; then add five ounces of glycerine. When cold, this fluid will produce the best and most lasting bubbles that can be made.

VANDERBILT.—W. H. Vanderbilt owns 239,840 shares of railroad stock, worth $88,750,000; railroad bonds worth $26,357,420; government bonds worth $70,580,000; and other securities worth $25,000,000. His wealth equals the $290,000,000 of the Duke of Westminster, and the income from it is six per cent., while that of the duke is but two, so that he is clearly the richest man in the world.

A new perfume, called "A Lily's Sigh," is now in use among women whose purses are long, the price being $5 per tiny phial. It produces an exquisite odor, very much like the heliotrope, and is said to have been originally introduced in this country by Mrs. Langtry.

A little girl read a composition before the minister. The subject was "a cow." She wove in this complimentary sentence: "A cow is the most useful animal in the world except religion."

A Mississippi pilot saw a comet and immediately cried: "I've got em; snakes I've had before, but a dead star has got tails on 'em; I'm the dead star."
